Terms of Use and Frequently Asked Questions for Electronic Institutional Subscriptions to Master Brewers Association of the Americas

Technical Quarterly

Published by MBAA,
a nonprofit scientific association since 1887.

TERMS of USE

Electronic Subscriptions to the Technical Quarterly are available to academic libraries, corporate libraries, and other institutions. Electronic institutional subscriptions include the following benefits:

1. Permission to freely distribute the content of the subscribed electronic journal to all employees, faculty, students, and/or local patrons of the subscribing institution who are located at the site(s) identified by the subscribing institution and whose computers are within the I.P. addresses that are provided to MBAA by the institution.

2. Online access to the current subscribed volume and all back issues of the journal that are located on the MBAA web server beginning with the 1964 volume year as long as the institution’s electronic subscription is active.

3. Freedom from restrictive licenses or signed agreements as long as United States copyright law is followed.

The following copyright statement is applied to the Technical Quarterly in every format. Permission to distribute according to these terms of use applies to current paid electronic subscribers.

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT
Copyright © by Master Brewers Association of the Americas.
All rights reserved.

Permission to Distribute for Institutional Electronic Subscribers. Permission is hereby granted to freely distribute the content of the MBAA journal to the employees, faculty, students, and/or local patrons of the subscribing institution via I.P. access during the subscription year. The employees, faculty, students, and/or local patrons must be located within the location(s) and I.P. address ranges as identified by the subscribing institution to MBAA.
Frequently Asked Questions

The questions and answers below further explain MBAA’s position on its institutional electronic subscriptions.

Q: How do the employees or students at an institution gain access to Technical Quarterly on a daily basis?

A: Via I.P. address recognition. MBAA requests the institution’s I.P. addresses so that your users do not need to login to Technical Quarterly. Access is quick, easy, and seamless for the user.

Q: What if the institution has more than one campus or location?

A: MBAA asks each institution to identify the campuses and locations served by the I.P. ranges you provide when you subscribe.

Q: How is the annual subscription price of an institution’s online access determined?

A: MBAA uses a number of factors to determine the price of the association’s electronic journals including the size of the institution, the quantity of MBAA subscriptions at the institution, and the number of faculty, students, and/or employees at the institution who are identified as potential users. MBAA is a nonprofit association publisher and it is the association’s goal to make the MBAA journal widely available online to as many potential users as possible at a reasonable price. The MBAA governing Board, which is comprised of scientists from universities and the brewing industry, wants to maintain the financial integrity of the journal while achieving a broad distribution of the scientific research.

Q: May employees, faculty, and students gain access to Technical Quarterly when they travel to other locations or from their homes, dorm rooms, etc. by remote personal login to their institution’s internal network?

A: Yes, but only if they work, teach, or attend the institution in the location(s) served by the I.P. ranges where the electronic access is subscribed. Employees at satellite facilities that are not physically on the same campus or site must be identified by the institution at the time the institution subscribes to be included as qualified users, even if the users of the subscribing institution share time at both sites.

Q: What happens if an institution subsequently drops its electronic subscription?

A: All access to the Technical Quarterly is lost.

Q: Are institutional users permitted to make copies of MBAA materials for distribution outside the institution’s own employees, faculty, students, and/or local library patrons where the journal is subscribed?

A: No

Q: What about interlibrary loan?

A: Subscribing institutions may supply interlibrary loan to the extent that they do normally with a print journal. Rather than supplying electronic files, the loaning institution may only supply printouts.

Q: Will licenses or signed agreements be required in the future?

A: MBAA reserves the right.

Q: Why did MBAA take the approach of providing electronic access without a signed agreement?

A: MBAA believes scholarly materials should be available within institutions with a little restriction as possible; provided its journals maintain their financial integrity. MBAA also believes that authors, readers, institutions, and journals within the scholarly community have a common purpose. Because of this, MBAA hopes all members of the community will act appropriately to ensure the ongoing simplicity of this system of access.